Village of Brockport Farmers' Market Prepped for New Season

The Village of Brockport Farmers' Market will open to the public for the 2008 season on June 15th, Father's Day. Featuring fresh produce grown by New York farmers, the Market will again provide the best of the farm to local customers.

"The Brockport Farmers' Market has been bringing the best fresh fruits, vegetables and other products to customers for four years," said Village Manager Ian Coyle. "We have another slate of excellent farmers this year and we're excited about the 2008 season."

Some of the things that visitors to the Market can expect to see in 2008 are the return of Java Junction coffee, smoke meat products and fresh baked goods from Greg'ry's.

The Village of Brockport Farmers' Market, which runs from June 15 through October 26, is located in Downtown Brockport on Market Street and is open Sundays from 8 am to 2 pm. For more information, visit <http://www.brockportny.org>

"Provide a high quality of life for all residents, exercising fiscal responsibility and preserving Brockport's unique heritage and historic character."
